Hasankeyf is a small village placed along the banks of the Tigris River in southeastern Turkey. Hasankeyf is far from the rest of Turkey, but one can easily reach the city of Batman by bus, plane or rail, and then cover the remaining hour or so of travel by minibuses offered by Hasankeyf town council. It costs 3 TL/person. It's also possible to reach Hasankeyf by taking Batman-Midyat-Mardin minibuses. Hasankeyf is rich in history throughout the ages. The main archeological highlight of Hasankeyf is the castle on the very top of the town, overlooking the river. Considering how extensive these ruins are, an entire day (or two) could easily be spent exploring.

A traditional Turkish dinner will usually start with a selection of meze (appetizers) served before the main meal. Ironically, most meze dishes are large enough to comprise an entire meal by themselves. A typical meze menu includes fresh salad greens in thick yoghurt sauce with garlic, plates of vegetable dishes cooked in olive oil, fried crispy savoury pastry, tomato and cucumber salad and white bean puree. Or several plates of different types of chopped salad, roasted capsicums in olive oil, boudgur and red lentil balls, marinated stuffed eggplant (aubergine), peppers stuffed with spices and nuts, and the list goes on.
